

JOSHUA LEDERBERG

Friberg
Karolinska Institutet
Stockholm

APR 25 1973

Environmental Pollutants/ List

Dear Dr. Friberg

I am trying to verify what may be an imperfect recollection of a report that appeared in some medical newspaper.

If I am not mistaken, you chaired a committee or seminar that drew attention to some of the most significant health hazards; this was related in some way to WHO or UN env. health activities.

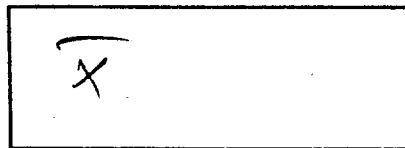

The only item that was not familiar to me was manganese.

I have recently received the comprehensive WHO report, "Health Hazards of the Human Environment"; and it is possible that Chap. 12 corresponds to this fugitive recollection; however, it is not evident that this particular section was your own contribution, from the printed text.

If you can send me any supplementary material, or confirm that I am pursuing nothing more than this book, as the case may be, I would appreciate your consideration.

I have been teaching a course on the sources of health and disease, for university undergraduates, which is the context of this interest.

With my cordial regards,
Sincerely,

PROFESSOR JOSHUA LEDERBERG
Department of Genetics
School of Medicine
Stanford University
Stanford, California 94305

GRAM IN N BIOLOGY

FRIBERG, Steen

Reprinted from the Stanford University Bulletin,
COURSES AND DEGREES 1972/73